

Partners in Excellence

Creating publishing jobs in the Gem City.

writing • editing • art research • illustration

graphic design • typesetting • project management

Dayton
Young
Black Professionals

Westchester Education Services

Dayton Young Black Professionals is excited to announce a new partnership with Westchester Education Services, creating jobs in educational publishing and ed tech for people in the City of Dayton.

This new partnership with Westchester Education Services embodies one of the Seven Pillars of Excellence—DYBP’s Culture Code and core organizing principles—Education & Workforce to further the group’s mission to mobilize excellence in the community. The partnership seeks to create publishing jobs in writing, editing, art research, illustration, graphic design, typesetting, and project management in the Gem City. DYBP will serve as a pipeline for recruiting creatives to work with the publishing team.

DYBP Founder and Executive Director, Daj’za Demmings said, “I’m excited for this partnership with Westchester Education Services to build a stronger workforce for the future and the community. Sharing and maximizing resources that we as a people wouldn’t have known about otherwise.”

Westchester Education Services President and Chief Content Officer Kevin J. Gray added, “We’re committed to developing resources in the Dayton area. There is a tremendous amount of talent here, and we are grateful for our partnership with DYBP, which will help us identify and draw upon that talent. Additionally, the demographics of our schools have changed, and publishers are struggling to find resources that represent the voices of younger, more diverse students. Through partnerships with organizations like DYBP, we can ensure that students are able to both see themselves in their school materials and learn about the lives of others.”